Olympic Stewardship Foundation

Putting Conservation on the Ground for Future Generations

Shared Belief:

Citizens, particularly those who live on their land, are capable of providing the very best care and management for the environment in which they live.

The Olympic Stewardship Foundation supports a combined land use approach that emphasizes individual stewardship with monitoring to assure effectiveness, and includes a regulatory component to be used as a backup only when the need can be demonstrated.

It's not whether we protect the environment, but how

Who, better than we?

What do you think ?

- Should we insist on voluntary stewardship, supported by education and incentives, to further on-the-ground conservation of our natural resources ?
- Should we insist that land-use policies be supported by local science that applies to local conditions ?
- Should we expect our government to demonstrate a need for the protection of a certain species or area before requiring restrictions, and to engage landowners in the resolution process ?
- Should we insist that the financial burden of protecting the environment for the common good be shared by the community ?
- Should we expect that land use policies be reasonable, effective, and fairly applied? Should we be prepared to litigate and protect landowners and the environment when they are not ?
